The Risks of Cigarette Smoke

Discovered in the early 1800s and named 'nicotamine', the oily essence now called nicotine is the main active ingredient of tobacco. Nicotine, however, is only a small component of cigarette smoke, which contains more than 4,700 chemical compounds, including 61 cancer-causing substances. In recent times, scientific research has been providing evidence that years of cigarette smoking vastly increases the risk of developing fatal medical conditions.

In addition to being responsible for more than 85 per cent of lung cancers, smoking is associated with cancers of, amongst others, the mouth, stomach and kidneys, and is thought to cause about 14 per cent of leukemia and cervical cancers. In 1990, smoking caused more than 84,000 deaths, mainly resulting from such problems as pneumonia, bronchitis and influenza. Smoking, it is believed, is responsible for 30 per cent of all deaths from cancer and clearly represents the most important preventable cause of cancer in countries like the United States today.

Passive smoking, the breathing in of the side-stream smoke from the burning of tobacco between puffs or of the smoke exhaled by a smoker, also causes a serious health risk. A report published in 1992 by the US Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) emphasized the health dangers, especially from side-stream smoke. This type of smoke contains more smaller particles and is therefore more likely to be deposited deep in the lungs. On the basis of this report, the EPA has classified environmental tobacco smoke in the highest risk category for causing cancer.

As an illustration of the health risks, in the case of a married couple where one partner is a smoker and one a non-smoker, the latter is believed to have a 30 per cent higher risk of death from heart disease because of passive smoking. The risk of lung cancer also increases over the years of exposure and the figure jumps to 80 per cent if the spouse has been smoking four packs a day for 20 years. It has been calculated that 17 per cent of cases of lung cancer can be attributed to high levels of exposure to second-hand tobacco smoke during childhood and adolescence.

A more recent study by researchers at the University of California at San Francisco (UCSF) has shown that second-hand cigarette smoke does more harm to non-smokers than to smokers. Leaving aside the philosophical question of whether anyone should have to breathe someone else's cigarette smoke, the report argues that the smoke experienced by many people in their daily lives is enough to produce substantial adverse effects on a person's heart and lungs.

on a vending machine had an effect on what was bought by secondary school pupils. A number of studies have also shown that food advertising can influence what children eat. One, for example, showed that advertising influenced a primary class's choice of daily snack at playtime.

D The next step, of trying to establish whether or not a link exists between food promotion and diet or obesity, is extremely difficult as it requires research to be done in real world settings. A number of studies have attempted this by using amount of television viewing as a proxy for exposure to television advertising. They have established a clear link between television viewing and diet, obesity, and cholesterol levels. It is impossible to say, however, whether this effect is caused by the advertising, the sedentary nature of television viewing or snacking that might take place whilst viewing. One study resolved this problem by taking a detailed diary of children's viewing habits. This showed that the more food adverts they saw, the more snacks and calories they consumed.

E Thus the literature does suggest food promotion is influencing children's diet in a number of ways. This does not amount to proof; as noted above with this kind of research, incontrovertible proof simply isn't attainable. Nor do all studies point to this conclusion; several have not found an effect. In addition, very few studies have attempted to measure how strong these effects are relative to other factors influencing children's food choices. Nonetheless, many studies have found clear effects and they have used sophisticated methodologies that make it possible to determine that i) these effects are not just due to chance; ii) they are independent of other factors that may influence diet, such as parents' eating habits or attitudes; and iii) they occur at a brand and category level.

F Furthermore, two factors suggest that these findings actually down-play the effect that food promotion has on children. First, the literature focuses principally on television advertising; the cumulative effect of this combined with other forms of promotion and marketing is likely to be significantly greater. Second, the studies have looked at direct effects on individual children, and understate indirect influences. For example, promotion for fast food outlets may not only influence the child, but also encourage parents to take them for meals and reinforce the idea that this is a normal and desirable behaviour.

G This does not amount to proof of an effect, but in our view does provide sufficient evidence to conclude that an effect exists. The debate should now shift to what action is needed, and specifically to how the power of commercial marketing can be used to bring about improvements in young people's eating.

GENERAL READING PRICTIC SAMPLE IELTS: Task 2 The second text (IELTS GENERAL READING) generally focuses on surviving on the workplace. Typic issues may include: study night courses, request a travel visa or request social assistance. The language is usually more formal than the language that will see in task 1 and will be slightly more difficult. The previous text has seven sections. What does the following information contain? Choose the correct letter (a-g) to answer. Pros & quot; Cons of working from home a) the fact that a person can work from home means that he can The work at any time or given place, increasing productivity and optimizing time. With intense and sometimes stressful communications outside the equation, a telecommuter does not only of hours of productive time to their day but also avoids the chances of unforeseen traffic problems that may lead to tardiness or even missing work altogether. B) ÁThe issue of cost-effectiveness should not be taken lightly. When fewer people are in the office it means that less space is needed, there is less electricity consumption and the company can save on paper, ink, water, coffee, and snacks as well. Some employees pay their fuel with a company credit card. Not having to drive to work will result in additional savings. C) ÁIt is no secret that regular work at the office is often interrupted by normal interaction with co-workers, phone calls, breaks, and meetings. Although most of these interruptions are involuntary, an employee cannot manage them. The responsible worker will deal with home-interruptions and distractions by scheduling or organizing them. Those who are willing to work hard can get more work done probably even in less time than at the office. D) ÁThis may be one of the most misunderstood of all the aspects regarding telecommuting due to the fact that many managers tend to view interruptions or distractions at home as serious obstacles for productivity. But the truth is that responsible employees will know how to organize their lives around said events whereas an impromptu meeting or responding to a bosseÁÁAs summons are impossible to anticipate or work into a schedule. E) ÁSo self-discipline is of the utmost importance. Without it, a few negative things may occur that will endanger not only performance but life/work balance as a whole. Boundaries must be set in various aspects: space limits in order to create a professional atmosphere and establish clear work environments as opposed to places for leisure and rest. Sticking to normal working hours is also essential. Being available 24/7 is detrimental to the much-needed life-work balance. Then, get everything you need in one place, before starting working and closing the door. Even in a small or shared space, try to designate an acerer as personal users. For last, put it of theme. While it may be tempting to sit on the sofa, it is much better to sit on a desk or table. If you do not have office furniture as an adjustable chair, try to use cushions to support your chair. C) Although it may seem a convenient moment to get the day with the homework, it can end up distracted. Now it is not time to start a laundry load or wash the dishes, since they prevent being productive. I wouldn't do them if you were at work, so you don't do them now. The same goes for everything. If you prepare lunch the night before work, do the same at home so you don't get distracted in the kitchen. D) Of course, sometimes working at home can make us feel that we have to be available to work in our desks all the time. Making time for breaks is important to help handle stretching feelings. Try to take regular breaks from the computer screen so that you feel more concentrated when you return. Even only 5 to 10 minutes of short rest every hour can help you make you more productive. E) Working from home also means that it could spend a lot of time without moving your body, which can lead to an accumulation of stretching and anxiety. You can invest in a standing desk if you prefer to work on your feet, but otherwise be able to stand regularly to stretch or move. If you have won an extra hours for not traveling, take advantage of the opportunity to exercise at home. F) remote work also takes us many of us to spend time within the one we normally do. But this should not mean stay locked inside all day. While you may not miss your daily journey, ensure that you leave the house at least once during the day. If possible, take the time to walk orin the park. A different perspective will also help undo mental blocks and give you a couple new eyes for any task you are fighting with. G) Being isolated is completely natural for most people when working from home. But there are many ways to stay in touch with those who matter. Program video calls and pick up the phone instead of sending emails. If you have difficulty working at home, talk to your colleagues or manager about your concerns. Ask how they are and if there are ways that can support each other. H) If you are a parent, it may be difficult to do work with your children at home. Still, it is not impossible if you plan ahead and have some flexibility. If you have someone who can help as a family member, you can do the most work. If your partner also works from home, both can take turns between seeing the children and working. I) However, setting boundaries with other members of your home is key to mental well-being while working at home. It is a good idea to have a discussion about your needs, especially with your children. Remind them that you still have work to do and you need time for silence to do so and share your schedule. Similarly, set limits with work. It's easier to answer work emails at high hours of the night your home is your office, but try to turn off work when you finish your normal day and remember it's your home.
